

Reclaim the Streets!

The (arms) fair is back in town!

The DSEi arms fair is back. That's the "Defence Systems and Equipment international" exhibition: a dull euphemism for a cash-orgy with (they claim) over 800 merchants of death and makers of bits of the killing machines.

A celebration of life – full of joy and anger and love and creative dissent – is the only possible answer to this.

That'll be a street party, then.

Time is short. It's on Wednesday 10 September in London's Docklands. We need you to get involved now. See over, and on the Web:

Reclaim the Streets

It's street party time!

Wednesday 10 September, Docklands

IT'S TIME to round up old friends and make new ones and form an affinity group – that's a bunch of people who will stick together on the day, watch out for each other, and astound us all with your fierce, funny, celebration of life against death.

Creativity, fluidity and spontaneity are going to have to be the order of the day.

Meet at 4pm at Rathbone Market, London E16 – DLR / Silverlink Canning Town, buses 15 / 115 from City/Aldgate & 5/276/300/330

DSEi is at the Excel Centre, a big exhibition shed on the Royal Victoria Dock. The other side of the railways and Victoria Dock Road is Canning Town. The contrast couldn't be starker, and people there know it.

Some things you may want to think about mobilising / contributing:

- Free food
- A free shop. Free art. Free bodies.
- Music
- More and different music
- Flyering likely collections of people in advance
- Safe but interesting things for kids to do
- Banner-making
- That idea you've always wanted to do but haven't told us about yet.

So let us know...

At the moment there are weekly open meetings so it's easy to get involved if you're in London. Check on the Web:

The Street Party is just one of a huge variety of planned opposition to DSEi. For more see:
